Clarifies Ownership Of Amelung Factory Site

To the Editor of The Post, Sir:

Although Mr. Martz's recent article concerning the Amelung Glass Factory was well written and interesting, there seems to be a general misunderstanding about the ownership of the mansion and the site of the factory.

My father-in-law, the late Vernon O. Yingling sold the house with about an acre of ground to Alden Fisher. It was originally part of the farm which my husband owns, and where we live. The factory remains in our possession. The sale of the mansion does not entail the sale of the excavation site.

References made to this are misleading — often causing the reader to conclude that the two are inseparable.

Please allow me to clarify this in view of the fact that our friends certainly have cause to wonder about our claim of ownership to the Amelung factory, upon reading many of the current news features.
